1 This is the way the air should flow through the stove. Use the hatch to adjust the draught. Never open the hatch more than the picture shows, or use the stove without the hatch. Always have water in the tub when using the stove, about as much water as the picture shows.

2 Set fire to a piece of birch bark or a firestarter. Do not use lighter fluid. Place the birch bark or firestarter in the stove, as close to the circulation pipes as possible. Let it burn for a minute before adding more tinder.

3 Add small logs and tinder sticks horizontally in the stove. Put the big logs to the sides and the smaller tinder in the middle. Add another piece of burning birch bark/firestarter close to the burn plate. The flames should always escape the stove through the chimney pipe, not the stove opening.

4 When the fire is going, fill the stove with logs, as the picture shows. Add logs every 20 minutes or so. Keep a strong fire in the stove. Close the stove lid completely when the water have reached a pleasant temperature.

5 If the water gets cold - adjust the hatch to allow for more draught, but no more than the picture shows. You can also put more logs on the fire during a bath.

6 Again, never leave the hatch off the stove, since this may result in flames escaping the stove and scorching the wooden frame of the tub, or parts of the interior.

7 Don't fill the stove with too much wood and make sure that the draught doesn't run the wrong way, making the flames escape through the stove opening. And lastly - make sure that the fire and embers have died out completely before emptying the tub.
